

The First 43 British General Elections, 1832-2001

This data set was put together over the course of a decade with the help of Bruce Tether and James Cornford (at Newcastle) Kevin Holohan, David Cutts, and Ron Johnston (At Bristol), Heather Eyre (at Leeds), John Pritchard (at Sheffield), William Field (who supplied the raw 1885-1951 data) and Ron Johnston (who found the source for the data from 1832-1885).

The Data is of all general election results since 1832 but were simplified by assigning votes to nearest equivalent modern parties: Con, Lab, Lib, Nat, Other and abstentions.

For the period 1832-1880: Chartists and Lib-Lab votes were labelled as Lab; votes were totalled to produce one per party per seat (so that there were no multi-member seats; university seats were ignored; then votes were redistributed to 1885 seats (i.e. Bristol's votes evenly distributed to the four seats of Bristol N, S, W and E using seat names as a guide to the allocation). A table is given below of how this allocation was done.

For the period 1885-1910: Liberal Unionists votes were labelled as Con; votes were simplified as before and all then redistributed to 1918 seats using Kinnear's maps: the British voter, 1968 (for example Bristol South votes were redistributed to Bristol South and Central – tables are given below). For the period 1918-1945: A similar process was followed, and the 25 new seats of 1945 allocated by hand, then redistributed to the seats of 1950 (see tables below). All the results by 1950-1951 seat were then redistributed to 1955 by the final table below – based on working with maps of boundaries by hand..

Next the 1955-1970 results were redistributed to 1974 areas using maps and Stead's appendix in the 1974 Nuffield study. The 1974-1979 results and all previous results were redistributed to 1983 seats using the BBC/ITN guide to the new seats of 1983. The 1983-1992 results were redistributed to 1997 seats using Ron Johnston and colleagues algorithms based on the 1991 Census. Data for the period 1955-1992 is deposited at the ESRC Data Archive.

The result is a matrix of: 42 Elections, 5 parties plus the electorate, over 641 seats.

The Seat which behaved most like the country as a whole over time since 1924 was Dover.

Implications of the past for post-1997

Rebasing the results of the last 30 General Elections to 1997 constituencies does not greatly alter most election results (in two marginal cases a different party wins).

The historic record illustrates that the closest parallels to 1997 were 1906 and 1945. However, the Liberals and Labour lost, respectively, in 1910 and 1950. In particular the 1945 victory had a similar geography to 1997 and similar middle class pro-Labour swings. However, neither of these landslides was as large as that of 1997 and both saw abstentions fall rather than rise. If the defeats, 1906-1910 and 1945-50 are projected onto 1997 Labour would maintain a large majority. In the event Labour maintained its majority in 2001 almost unchanged.

Having votes by the same set of seats over a long time period allows inter election swings to be compared (by correlation). Before 1951 there were weak national swings. 1945 may not be a good comparison to 1997 as a result (where the largest geographical swing was in abstentions). After 1964 the spatial relationship between the parties became distinctive. Con and Lib became consistently positively correlated. Of most interest is the lack of any great distinctive difference in the patterns between 1987, 1992 and 1997. The 1997 landslide victory was far more about seats than votes, such that a slight change in votes, all in the right direction, could have a great change on seats.

Middle England constituencies are particularly interesting. Those which swing most easily between parties. Labour gained 152 constituencies from the Conservatives in 1997 containing 10.5 million electors. They gained only 0.85m more votes, abstentions rose by 0.84m, the Tory vote fell by 1.26m and the Liberal vote by 0.33m. The inter-election correlations for these seats are far lower than for the country as a whole and the established relationships between the parties is also far looser over time. The share of the vote by party in these seats is almost identical to that in the same areas in 1945. However, only in 1865 did the Liberals almost win all these seats, then 70% in 1906, with Labour winning 65% in 1945.

It is possible to imagine a 30-40 year voting cycle of Labour/Liberal victories: 1832, 1865, 1906, 1945, 1966, 1997 (33, 41, 39, 21, 31 years) with a strengthening Conservative vote in between until the electorate 'snaps'. It is equally possible to conclude that there are sufficient differences between the period prior to 1950 and now, such that we have no precedent for post 1997 possibilities. The historical precedent, if any, is that it takes a sustained period out of power (a generation) before the electorate in large numbers swing away from the Tories... before they gradually return. As yet they have not returned.
